

Volume 2: Chapter XXXIII
Sense and Sensibility

How does John Dashwood try to convince himself and others that his unwillingness to help the sisters is not born of greed?

Does his argument seem valid to Elinor? To you?

How else are readers shown the character of John Dashwood and his wife?