

Chapter XLVIII: “A Scene in the Corso”
The Marble Faun

Much of the novel is dedicated to descriptions of Rome’s customs, art and architecture. How do these passages fit into the structure of the overall novel? Are they necessary, or do they distract from the plot? Support your answer with textual evidence.